

WORD IN THE VILLAGE

What do you think the most important election platform/issue is for the upcoming provincial election?

Scott Parkhill: "I've had enough of the Liberal corruption."

James Johnston: "Mental health awareness. It seems to be quite underfunded. And I guess its part of healthcare but it should be a bigger part of it."

Jason Ivory: "To be honest, I'm not one to follow or care about politics because I think it's a joke."

Trisha Price: "I haven't been following it too closely. I'll try to read the follow up for the debate next month."

Jeff Scott: "I'm going to say childcare is pretty high up on my list. I've got three little ones at home. I know in a lot of the schools there have been a lot of things coming, but they're a little bit slow; I don't know if that's more from the federal level. I know in town here there's supposed to be some expansions with Centennial and others to offer more after-school care."

Gillian McKeen: "There are a lot of things Premier Wynne is promising; where's the money coming from for what she wants to do? You hear a lot of empty promises. People want to get elected and they do their best. New people going into politics may not realize it's not as easy as they think it is to pass things. There needs to be more balance put into minimum wage."

Christie DeSouza: "Conscientious objection for medical professionals. They should, according to their own morals, be able to say no to ending a life."

Cora Bailey: "I'm not of voting age yet, but I am a student. So as the election gets closer, I will be paying attention to the educational aspects of it and how the results will impact my peers and I."
