"Open Streets are community-based programs that temporarily open a selected street to people, closing them to cars. By doing this the streets become a place where people of all ages, abilities, and backgrounds can come out, be active and improve their health. Open Streets are considered a 'healthiest practice' because this is a tried and tested model developed by experts and based on results," according to Margaret Taylor, Active Living Coordinator. "By participating in Open Streets, people can begin to change their habits and a city can change its culture of health."

Ride your bike, bring your skateboard, or come on foot. An active lifestyle has many benefits, and the Town's goal is to make active choices the easy choices for individuals and families.
