Bridging the gap between science, English

KATHRYN BOYLE
kboyle@theifp.ca

Creating a link between English and biology has come easily to two teachers at Georgetown District High School.

Teachers Sylvonna Brennan, who teaches English, and Andrea De Mendonca, who teaches biology, have concocted a course that joins the two subjects together to create the hands-on, thinking-outside-the-box course for their Grade 11 university students.

Last year, Brennan and now-retired teacher Stephen McDougall decided to bridge the two subjects.

"It was such a longtime coming," Brennan explained.

At first, many people could not see where the link was between the two very different subjects.
