The Lambert family is once again operating a stunning Christmas light display at their 14 Johnson Crescent home in aid of Georgetown Hospital— but this time with the help of a superfan.

Darryl and Kathy Lambert and their family host the 50,000-light show, which is synchronized to music and cycles through various displays, as passersby can tune into the music on their car radios.

This year marks the 17th year the Lamberts have set up a display, the fifth year in Georgetown. There is a cash donation box at the front of the yard for those who enjoy the show to donate, with all proceeds going to Georgetown Hospital.

To date, the display has raised more than $41,000 for the Georgetown Hospital during the past four years.

This year Darryl found he had acquired a fan when he started to set up the display in September.

Five-year-old Gabriel McNeill took a great interest in the progress of the light show, and had his parents drive him by the house every day— and sev-

CP decision a concern for Town

By CYNTHIA GAMBLE

A Canada Post decision to stop door-to-door mail delivery could have a potential impact on the Town in the years to come.

According to the recent Canada Post announcement, over the next five years, the one-third of Canadian households that receive their mail at their door will be converted to community mailbox delivery beginning in the second half of 2014 with the transition expected to take five years to complete across the country.

Regional Councillor Clark Somerville brought up the issue at Monday's council meeting, asking Director of Infrastructure Services Chris Mills whether Canada Post would consult with the Town on where the future neighbourhood mail boxes would be sited. He noted in rural areas where mail delivery had ceased and replaced with community boxes, the siting of some of those boxes has not gone over well with the residents.

Mills said, "Typically we
