critical hub for our growth. There are no plans that would see our strong presence in Georgetown change," said Ellis.

In a press release issued by Milacron it was stated the "transformative transaction will create a rapidly growing company with world-class capabilities across five businesses: Milacron (Plastics Machinery), Mold-Masters (Hot Runners), DME (Mold Base Technologies), Aftermarket (Parts and Service) and CIMCOOL(r) Fluid Technology (Metalworking Fluids and Services)."

"Each business will continue to focus on the unique, value-added solutions they bring to their respective customers while leveraging the tremendous synergies that exist among all the businesses," it was stated. "The combined entity will provide its customers with market-leading technologies, superb global engineering and R&D leadership. Through their complementary product lines, Milacron and Mold-Masters will be able to offer a broader portfolio of exceptional products and services, providing solutions for customers' complex plastics needs."

Tom Goeke, Chief Executive Officer of Milacron, will lead the combined entity. Bill Barker, President and CEO of Mold-Masters will continue to lead that business.

"The acquisition creates a global leader in the plastics industry with the scale, technological leadership, international presence and competitive positioning to deliver a wide range of products and services to more customers in more markets around the world. Mold-Masters' expertise in the high-growth hot-runner market is second to none, and we are excited by the unique customer value proposition and numerous opportunities for growth that will result from this combination. Bill Barker, his management team and all of his employees share our commitment to excellence. We are thrilled that they will continue to lead the Mold-Masters business going forward and are excited to welcome them to our team," said Goeke.

"We are also very excited to join Milacron and become part of an industry-leading company known for providing high-quality plastics processing equipment and products, as well as exceptional customer service and aftermarket support," said Barker.

"We have developed deep relationships with our customers over the course of many years and will continue to work closely with them to deliver the products and services they rely on, just as we do today. I am confident that combining Mold-Masters' unique capabilities with Milacron's will position the new company to provide even greater benefits to customers. I look forward to working closely with Tom and his team to realize the incredible growth potential of our combined organization."
