Town waives fees for school

By CYNTHIA GAMBLE
Staff Writer

Applause and cheers rang through a packed public gallery during Monday night's council meeting at the Civic Centre after Halton Hills Council unanimously approved a staff recommendation to waive development charges for a Halton Hills Christian School project.

The privately-run non-profit school at 11643 Trafalgar Rd. plans to build a 6,060 sq. ft. (563 sq. m.) addition to allow classes currently housed in portables to return to the main building. The school, first built in 1965, has had four additions since then to accommodate growing enrolment. Its pupil count currently sits at 296 pre-school to Grade 8 students—surpassing student growth projections by 9 per cent.

Among the Town fees for the building project is a contribution of $25,260 for development charges. Last year, the Town waived DC charges of $7,012 for an addition to accommodate pre-school and Kindergarten programs.

“As we expand, we wish to continue to be a good citizen and partner to the community of Halton Hills,” said school board chair Ron Snelts in his presentation to Halton Hills council. “Our expansion is completely funded by donors in our community and it is our commitment to continue to serve the population of Halton Hills as a non-profit organization. By our request today to seek the waiving of development fees, it is our goal to keep tuition affordable for the families of Halton Hills, and to address the needs of Halton Hills within our programs and initiatives.”

JANE FOGAL

According to the school's website it has reached $1.8 million in pledges and gifts of its $2.1 million goal. The building project will begin this summer.

Councillor Jane Fogal said she had no problem supporting the recommendation, saying the benefits that HHCS gives back to Halton Hills far exceeds the $25,000 waiver.

She pointed out that Halton Hills council approved the waiver last year and “if it was right before, it's right now.”
