

Survey says: the value of home ownership is still worth the wait

According to a national survey commissioned by Genworth Canada, homebuyers are working harder and longer to save for a down payment and remain confident in the long-term benefits of buying a home. The annual poll, completed in conjunction with the Canadian Association of Credit Counselling Services (CACCS), asked 1,507 Canadians questions about their financial well-being and preparedness.

"Despite tighter mortgage qualification criteria over recent years, survey results point towards positive trends in homebuyer behaviour," said Stuart Levings, Chief Operating Officer of Genworth Canada.

"With a stable economy and real estate market, Canadians appear to have more confidence in the value of homeownership and see their goals of homeownership and financial well-being as more achievable."
