Review: GLT's latest play is full of laughs

By CYNTHIA GAMBLE
Staff Writer

Georgetown Little Theatre has returned to its tried and true form and in doing so produced a winning play to end its 2013-14 season.

Who's in Bed with the Butler?, written by Michael Parker, and directed by Alex Kanarek, opened Good Friday at the John Elliott Theatre to a small but appreciative audience.

Set in a northern Californian mansion, the plot revolves around a butler, who after the death of his employer, must deal with the daughter intending to contest her father's will, a money-grabbing lawyer, a bumbling private detective, an actress, three amorous bimbos, a deaf housekeeper and oh, Oscar the rat.

The will bequeaths the art, yacht and cars to the three bimbos— who in turn have sold them to the mysterious Bimbo Corporation. Let the shenanigans begin!

The two-hour farce has good pacing, and lots of laughs. The acting is fine with all actors equally matched in skill.

Michael Halsall takes on the role of the butler, Clifton, and creates an affable hero.

Sharonne Young is terrific as the actress Clifton hires to protect him from the unwanted?? attentions of his partners in crime. Her charm and wit seems to be the glue that binds the play together.

The bimbos (Christine Vitale-Zeni, Iana Nedvijenko and Chiv Chivaul) are fabulous, each creating a vivid personality specific to their characters.

Lisa Rasanen and Rob Long are solid as the daughter and the lawyer while Pamela Niesiobedzki-Curtis provides some laughs as the deaf housekeeper, forever searching for her pet rat, Oscar.

Gary McIlravey as inept detective William Davis Jr., often stole centre stage with his slapstick comedy of pratfalls and malapropisms.

Oscar was thankfully a puppet, otherwise I would have been standing on the furniture too.

The set design is simplistic and suits the play.

Good casting plus good direction equals a fun play for a good adult night of entertainment.
