

Museum in search of pictures of Canadian icon Terry Fox

Did you see Terry Fox run during his 1980 Marathon of Hope? Did you take a photo of him, or do you know someone who did?

If so, the Canadian Museum of History, in partnership with the Terry Fox Centre, is looking for digital copies of those photos that may be selected for display in a major exhibition planned to celebrate the 35th anniversary of Fox's marathon.

Acton councillor Jon Hurst announced the call for photos at a recent council meeting.

"I suspect there are many pictures of Terry taken in our community, given that Terry and the Marathon of Hope entourage spent three days in Halton Hills— more time than in any other community," said Hurst.

Anyone who has pictures of Fox while he was here is asked to submit them to www.historymuseum.ca/terryfox

In addition, Hurst said everyone is invited to submit their Marathon of Hope pictures to the Halton Hills Public Library.

As the "keeper" of community memories, the Library will be developing a Terry Fox Facebook page similar to its ice storm page. Please contact Geoff Cannon at Geoff.cannon@haltonhills.ca.

During the leg of his Marathon in Halton Hills, Hurst said Fox attended a Cancer Society dinner in his honour at the Lions Hall in Georgetown on July 22, 1980 and also spent the night at a rural Acton home.

The marathon took him through Acton, Georgetown, Norval and Rockwood.

He was forced to stop the Marathon on Sept. 1 because his cancer returned. After months of treatment, Fox died June 28, 1981.

His Marathon of Hope has raised more than $600 million.
