Classics Against Cancer group wants its stolen signs back

Organizers with the Classics Against Cancer are shaking their heads over the mystery of the missing signs.

In the last week and half, about 35 signs promoting the annual Father's Day event in Cedarvale Park have gone missing from locations throughout Halton Hills. The promotional signs had been posted on both public and with permission on private land.

There is no sign of the signs; none remain behind damaged or dismantled, they have just disappeared. Classics organizer Jamie Watt said the loss— worth about $1,500— is significant for the volunteer organization, which gives its proceeds from the annual event to an organization aiding people with cancer.

The thefts have been reported to Halton Regional Police, and organizers have also talked to the Town of Halton Hills to see whether Town employees may have taken the signs down when maintaining the boulevards.

However, Halton Hills Superintendent of Public Works Dick Spear said Town employees did not remove any signs, but has alerted his staff to keep an eye out for them.

Watt would like the signs back— no questions asked. He said the signs can be dropped off in the parking lot of his business, Carpet Barn Carpet One, 26 Guelph St. or call him on the Classics hotline phone, 647-558-8143.

TO residents charged with theft at Premium Outlets

Two Toronto residents have been charged in connection with the theft of about $1,300 worth of shoes from the Hudson's Bay Outlet at Toronto Premium Outlets Friday afternoon.

Police say a loss prevention officer saw a man handing several shoes to a woman who put the shoes in a hidden pocket in her dress.

The couple left without paying and was stopped by the security officer, who contacted Halton Police. Charged with failing to comply with recognizance and theft under $5,000 is Antoni Kowalski, 32. Charged with theft under $5,000 is Patrycja Boguslawska, 30.

A Georgetown man was charged following an incident on a bus May 31 in the Moore Park Cr. and Main St. N. area at about 11 p.m. Police report occupants of the bus were taking part in a pub-crawl and near the conclusion of the trip there was an incident between two passengers— a male and female. Police say the female victim reported to police the male grabbed her by the hair and allegedly struck her in the head. When police arrived the man had already left the area in a taxi. Police located the taxi a short time later at Guelph St. and Maple Ave. and charged the passenger. Charged with assault is Scott Walker, 47.
