Upgrade on home security and convenience

The biggest security risk on your property is a busy family schedule. Typically, multiple keys are made for each household as we come and go at all times of the day. This puts families at a higher risk for losing keys, forgetting to lock doors, and for making other simple security blunders.

Today, by using the latest electronic technology every homeowner can take steps to get maximum safety, night and day. If you haven't updated your own locks and security systems in a while, you may find all the advancements as intriguing as they are useful.

State-of-the-art electronics, for example, is giving our households precision security, better options for the budget, and it has quickly made keys a thing of the past. Imagine, no key needed when carrying groceries and packages into the house, or when you go out power-walking or jogging with it tied precariously to your shoe. Today, the convenience of electronics is even letting us control the security of our premises from a smart phone.

This technology can save us money as well, says the management at Schlage, a leading name in security hardware for doors. Instead of the monthly fees required for a monitoring service, why not install electronic deadbolts with a built-in alarm?

Take a look at two of the most advanced models by Schlage featuring either a touchpad, or a keypad. The sleek and elegantly crafted Touchscreen Deadbolt gives you a smudge-proof screen to activate, and the Keypad Deadbolt is equally refined with the familiar numeric keys. The Touchscreen has a built-in alarm feature that tells you immediately when someone tampers with it, or tries to force it open, or if a family member goes in and out. By using electronic codes instead of keys, you can also give housekeepers and contractors the entry numbers, and then delete that code when no longer needed.

The details are at schlage.com. You will see that the Touchscreen Deadbolt can be enrolled with a Z-wave service provider to give you features like automated controls for lights, heating, and cooling, plus camera surveillance and the ability from a remote location to lock and unlock the doors. You can also pre-schedule the monitoring for specific times every day, and if the alarm is triggered, it will send you a text alert.
