After 40 years, Hornby Co-op Nursery School to close its doors

By EAMONN MAHER
Staff Writer

After almost four decades, the Hornby Co-operative Nursery School will cease to exist, so an open house "tribute night" has been planned for Thursday, July 24 from 6-9 p.m.

Located in a former church building near the intersection of Trafalgar Rd. and Steeles Ave., the nursery school welcomes past students and their families to attend the celebration, which will feature displays of photos and yearbooks.

Andrea Murdoch, communications officer for the school, said that declining enrolment was part of the reason for the closure, but the landowner recently informed the HCNS's board of directors that the building would no longer be available to them during the upcoming school year.

The Hornby school offered a morning/afternoon preschool program and a kids' summer camp, employing two full-time teachers. Murdoch noted that many parents with now kids at the school were students there themselves.

"It's sad to see it close, but we want to celebrate all the great memories from the past 40 years," she said.

"We're looking at it as more of a tribute night, nothing formal, and we're hopeful that a lot of our former students will be able to drop in."

Hey volunteers,
Thanks a Latte

Linda Denny (left) and Judy Burtney enjoyed the photo booth opportunity with Keith Clark of Flashpoint Photobooths at the Town of Halton Hills Thanks a Latte coffee-house style celebration last month. All community volunteers were thanked for the special role they play each day through volunteering in our community.
