Fire alert! Overloaded electrical outlets is risky

People often overlook many potential fire hazards that exist in their home. And, one of these is overloading extension cords and electrical outlets.

So before you go ahead and plug things into all of your outlets, make sure you know how much it can withstand. This is the same for a power bar.

"Overloading electrical outlets is a common occurrence during the holiday season in particular," says Wayne Ross, an insurance expert with Aviva Canada.

The good news is that you can easily reduce the risk by following a few simple tips:

- Check cords before use: Always check cords for damage before using them. If they are damaged, they could spark and cause a fire.

- Invest in a high quality power bar: If you are going you use a number of appliances and devices and plug them into a power bar to share power, invest in a power bar that can handle the load.

- Don't run cords under carpets or rugs: Doing this could cause damage to the cord and spark a fire in the rug.

- Use the appropriate cords outside: Make sure that all extension cords you use outside are weatherproofed and suitable for how you are using them.

- Use ULC certified cords: Ensure that the extension cords you use are Underwriters Laboratory Canada certified. More detailed information is available from your insurance broker or at AvivaCanada.com
