Town's brand wins marketing award

The Town of Halton Hills has won a Marketing Canada Award for its creation of a new community-based brand.

The Town won a Brand Identity Award from the Economic Developers Association of Canada at its national conference in Calgary Sept. 28.

The community-based brand that has the tagline—Small Town Living at Its Best—was developed in partnership between the Town of Halton Hills and Halton Hills Cultural Roundtable to complement the existing Town corporate brand, but also convey the enduring sustainable nature of the community.

The brand was grassroots driven and inspired, and used a highly consultative community based methodology to engage residents through focus groups and online surveys.

"The community brand belongs to everyone and the community is the target audience— individuals, groups and businesses. The goal of the brand is to unite everyone around our shared values, help preserve our distinctive character, and enhance our small town way of life," said Mayor Rick Bonnette.

Bonnette emphasized that a community brand is not just a logo or tagline, but represents what the community is known for; what makes it unique.

Everyone in the community is encouraged to learn about the brand and use it to complement their own identity efforts.

Details of the brand guidelines for the use of the logo and other dimensions of the brand are available at no cost to local organizations.
