or habitual short sleep duration are less likely to succeed academically compared to those who enjoy a good night's sleep.

In the new study involving more than 20,000 adolescents, aged 12 to 19, from Uppsala County in Sweden, Amos said that researchers from Uppsala University demonstrated that reports of sleep disturbance and habitual short sleep duration (less than seven hours per day) increased the risk of failure in school.

Amos said she intends to share with the Halton Catholic board her motion/report that was passed at the Jan. 7 board meeting. The Catholic board is under no obligation to join the public board in a possible change to high school start times, she said.

"It can be done without them but it could be done with them. They have different routes; some are the same," she said of Catholic board schools busing. "That's all part of the puzzle. I just want a preliminary snapshot of what needs to be done and the ramifications."
