Keep pesticides locked up

Every year poison control centres across Canada receive calls from parents concerned about the possible poisoning of their children.

While most calls relate to medications and household cleaners, some involve pesticides that are used to control rats or mice, called rodenticides. Since mouse and rat bait can look like cereal or pet food, children and pets may accidentally eat it. This is why, in 2013, Health Canada introduced new measures to prevent such accidents.

Rat and mouse poisons available for use by homeowners are now only sold in a pre-packaged ready-to-use bait station, designed to be tamper-resistant to children and pets. Certain high toxicity rodenticides can now only be used by licensed pest control professionals.
