An Acton man who is still clinging to life in hospital at press time after being assaulted during a weekend house party in Streetsville has been identified in court documents as 29-year-old Welland Calamatta. Police said they responded to a call to a residence on Brookside Dr. in the area of Queen St. and Britannia Rd., just before 2 a.m. on Saturday.

An Erindale man accused of aggravated assault in an attack in Streetsville over the weekend that has left a younger man clinging to life in hospital, has been released on bail.

Wayne Junior Anglin, 33, of Mississauga, was arrested Sunday after turning himself in to police and has been charged with aggravated assault. Anglin is charged for allegedly "endangering the life" of Welland Calamatta, 29, of Acton, during the assault, according to court documents obtained by Metroland earlier this week.

Anglin was released on $10,000 bail by Justice of the Peace Eileen Walker in Brampton court, with a number of conditions placed on him that include a nightly curfew, according to court documents.

Peel Regional Police say it appears no weapon was used during the fight, which occurred outside a house party on Brookside Drive.

Calamatta remains in "grave" condition at press time in hospital, according to a police source.

Police said they responded to a call to a residence on Brookside Drive, in the area of Queen St. and Britannia Rd., just before 2 a.m. on Saturday morning after Calamatta was injured following an altercation outside the residence during a party.

The victim was first taken to a local hospital but was later transferred to a Toronto trauma centre
