Band intends to bring awareness to the hardship of young adults

"They say it takes a community to raise a child and I eventually found peace about 10 years ago helping with those type of situations."

At some point Saturday evening, Acton native Erinn Tellier-Cook will share her story of hardship and despair as a young adult.

Chaffey, who works at two youth shelters in Peel Region, said that Halton lacks a similar support system for at-risk youth and that he constantly sees cases of kids slipping through the cracks.

"A lot of these kids have grown up without something we take for granted and that's support," he added.

"These kids have issues and sometimes it's something they've done, yes, but sometimes it's circumstances in life and having worked in poverty for a long time, I see what happens when people don't get supported, so that's why I love what BTG does. They've lost a lot of their funding recently and it's the kind of thing we need to support."

The Hub can accommodate about 30-35 people for a show so Chaffey said Saturday's event is more of an awareness exercise, although attendees are asked to donate $5 to Bridging the Gap Halton.
