The Georgetown Bach Chorale will be performing an afternoon of classics at the Helson Gallery on Sunday.

The concert will feature Gregorio Allegri's "Miserere," as well as compositions by Anton Bruckner, Antonio Lotti and J.S. Bach.

Artistic director Ronald Greidanus says while most of their concerts are backed up by either a baroque orchestra or piano, this particular one offers a different approach.

"One of the things that makes this concert special is that it's mainly an a cappella concert so all you basically hear in the concert is the choir singing," Greidanus said.

He notes that he chose the Miserere composition because he believes it highlights the sublimity and the transparency of the voices and the choral sound itself.

"It has approximately 10 high C's sung by the soprano throughout the work, which is a pretty hard feat because most people can't sing high C's," he added. "It's amazing because suddenly out of this beautiful somber texture comes these beautiful high notes."

The concert begins at 2:30 p.m. on March 4. Tickets are $30 for adults and $10 for students. For further information, visit <http://www.haltonhills.ca/gallery/>.
