Halton Hills mayor relieved by Norval Quarry's end

ALEXANDRA HECK

Halton Hills Mayor Rick Bonnette is relieved that the Norval Quarry isn't going through. "This is wonderful news," he said at a council session, explaining that the project would have disrupted the nearby hamlet of Norval. The Town of Halton Hills officially stated their opposition to the proposal, which was set to extract shale from an 86-acre site just north of Norval. With an estimated 30 truckloads of material travelling from the quarry each day, the mayor said the project would have a negative effect on traffic and congestion in the little hamlet to its south. Halton Hills was one of the municipalities sitting on a joint area review team (JART) with the City of Brampton, Town of Caledon, Region of Peel, Credit Valley Conservation Authority and the Ministry of Municipal affairs as well as

Ministry of Natural Resources. "This quarry was going to have a significant impact on the village of Norval," said Bonnette. "It goes back to many times in these council chambers, we wanted the province to adopt the JART process," Bonnette said. He added that with other aggregate proposals in the area, like the Hidden Quarry in Rockwood - the municipality would like the province to have stronger policies on handling quarry applications.

CASHh accepting donations

April is Give Where You Live month for Cancer Assistance Services, and CASHh volunteers are busy raising awareness. The organization currently has a booth set up at the Georgetown Market Place and will be out and about around local neighbourhoods with door hangers, inviting Halton Hills residents to donate to the cause. CASHh is in its 18th year of serving Halton Hills and April is its big month to raise the funds that will allow the organization to provide transportation services to clients attending treatments, or those who need a little bit of help around the home. "We run solely on volunteers and donations from our community," said CASHh volunteer Julie Liddle. "We are exceptionally lucky to have this in our community."
