

3 workers injured in deck collapse at Georgetown development

Two carpenters and a builder working at a Georgetown development were transported to hospital last week, after the second-storey deck they were standing on collapsed.

According to the Ministry of Labour, an inspector was called to the location on Foxtail Court (near Eighth Line and 15 Side Road) on June 27 where three workers were injured. A recommendation was made to the builder, Double Oak Homes, not to disturb the scene and the ministry says this request was complied with.

Peter Dyck, owner of Einbau Ltd., the millwork installation company on site at the time, said two of his workers were injured in the collapse - one reportedly suffering a broken leg and the other with possible fractures. Dyck says he was not on site at the time of the incident.

Double Oak Homes president Kieran Keaveney was the third individual injured in the incident, according to an employee from the builder's office. The employee told the Independent that Keaveney is not yet back at work as a result of his injuries.

The investigation is still ongoing through the Ministry of Labour.

Sgt. Dana Nicholas of Halton Regional Police Service says police presence was not requested at the scene and officers have not been involved in investigating this incident.
