SOME NEARBY RESIDENTS SHOCKED TO LEARN THE FACILITY EVEN EXISTED

does it for personal medication," said Geler. "There's no contemplation of a marijuana production facility."

He says that with the legalization of marijuana, he did not have concerns about renting one of the units in the old mill to someone who would grow a small number of plants.

"The long-term plan is to have a redevelopment of the property," said Geler, who plans to have multi-unit residential developments on the site in the next two to three years.

"This is an old building," he said, noting that the agreement with the cannabis grower is on a short-term plan.

As for the town of Halton Hills, staff have been working with the owner and the grower to come up with a solution that meets required code.

THE ISSUE
MARIJUANA PRODUCTION OPERATION
LOCAL IMPACT
COMMITTEE TO DECIDE WHETHER IT WILL PERMIT PRODUCTION FACILITY

On the notice made out to residents, it outlines two options they could take. One is to grant permission for the production of marijuana on the site for three years, and the other is a minor variance, which would give the owner relief from the zoning bylaw that does not currently allow marijuana production.

The proposal will go before the town's committee of adjustment on Wednesday, Sept. 5, at 7 p.m. in Halton Hills council chambers.

STORY BEHIND THE STORY

For residents on Rosetta Street in Georgetown, a peculiar smell in the neighbourhood has them asking some questions. Now, the town of Halton Hills has notified them that a cannabis production facility is operating in the old mill across the street.
