Why do I need Grit?

“Grit” is an attitude that keeps you going when the going gets tough and even when you have experienced a failure or a setback. It is similar to resilience in that it can be built in a person over time. Grit helps you stay focused to pursue long term goals.

You can develop “Grit” by:

1. Pursuing a long term goal and focusing on your internal sense of satisfaction as you make steps toward the desired outcome and once you achieve it.
2. Keeping up with the boring tasks necessary to reach your objective and justify those repetitive actions by remaining focused on the bigger goal. An example is practicing piano to increase your skill level in order to play that difficult song you really want to play.
3. Following through with difficult commitments. That requires “Grit” while simultaneously building it. Encourage yourself and see the trial and error process as par for the course.

Whether it's a child participating in extracurricular activities or an adult who is developing a new skill, staying involved in an activity for a minimum of two years allows a person to see improvement in their performance through deliberate practice, intrinsic motivation and follow-through. This experience of mastery is critical in the process of developing Grit.

Coaching can benefit people who wish to develop Grit by helping them to stay on track. To learn more about Grit and how you can build it within yourself, contact Manon Dulude PhD, RP, PCC at info@forgecoachingandconsulting.com.
