

TACTICAL TEAM INVESTIGATION CONNECTED TO BRAMPTON HOMICIDES, PEEL POLICE SAY

Peel regional police have confirmed that the tactical rescue unit investigation at Main Street and Maple Avenue in Georgetown is connected to the two homicides that occurred in Brampton early Sunday morning.

Armed officers from Peel regional police's tactical rescue unit, along with first responders, were spotted stationed outside the Georgetown home this afternoon.

Around 2:30 p.m. the tactical unit left the residence. Plainclothes officers remained on-site.

An officer conducting the investigation told the Independent that everything was under control and that no further information could be revealed at that time.

Peel police media officer Const. Akhil Mooken later confirmed that the investigation is related to the two homicides that took place on Sunday.

In the early morning hours of Sept. 2, two men were gunned down in Brampton, approximately six hours apart.

The first incident occurred at 12:43 a.m., in the area of Vodden Street East, west of Kennedy Road.

A man and woman were transported to the hospital with serious injuries. The man, identified as Clifford Correia, 27, from Brampton, died in hospital.

Police responded to the second occurrence on Townley Crescent, shortly after 6:34 a.m. and found the victim with obvious signs of trauma. Georgetown resident Derrick McKeown, 33, was pronounced dead at the scene.

On Sept. 3, Brampton resident Patrick Doyle, 27, was arrested and charged with two counts of first-degree murder and one count of attempted murder.

The investigation is ongoing.
