Pretrial hearings for a retired Georgetown music teacher accused of sexually abusing music students in his home decades ago have started and are set to continue in early December.

Dale Wood of Markdale was arrested in the spring of 2018 after a victim came forward alleging assault while she was a young music student. Wood was arrested a second time after two other individuals came forward.

He faces four counts of sexual assault from three alleged victims.

Pretrial hearings are not open to the public or media and are an opportunity for the Crown, Wood's lawyer Charles Baryhydt and the judge to meet and establish a number of terms for the trial.

Dale Wood is a retired music instructor who is facing sexual assault charges dating back to the 1980s, when he taught vocal lessons out of his home.

The Crown would establish what sort of sentencing they would seek, and it is an opportunity for the accused to plead innocent or guilty.

The pretrial hearing is set to continue in the Milton courthouse on Dec. 6 in courtroom 16 at 2 p.m.
