The family-run restaurant that opened on Main Street in downtown Georgetown last month has relaunched its menu for the new year, taking into consideration requests from local residents.

The intimate, Italian-style eatery serves a variety of pizza and pasta options, and a wide selection of meat and fish mains. Although mostly traditional, the menu also offers a few unpredictable options for diners, including the addition of an escargot appetizer. For visitors with dietary restrictions, owner Liana Reinhardt says, The Bridgewood has several alternatives and will make substitutions to ensure visitors can still enjoy the dishes of their choosing.

"We can cater to everyone: vegetarian, vegan, gluten-free, those who are lactose-intolerant. For people with any allergies or restrictions, we can substitute anything on the menu. Any sauces you want changed, we can do that for any pastas and the pizzas, as well," she says.

Also new this year is a revamped lunch menu, which includes smaller portions at more economical prices, as well as the option for customers to order in advance.

"We've relaunched our new menus, and we're just making it more feasible for people to come in and have a lunch and be able to order something and be able to go back to the office," Reinhardt says.

Other additions to The Bridgewood include brunch on Saturdays from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m., and prime rib on Fridays and Saturdays.

"We also do fresh, in-house-made desserts and daily specials every day," she says.

Reinhardt says her family has a long history in the food industry, owning restaurants in both Toronto and Scotland. She says that, for her, The Bridgewood is a new and exciting opportunity.

"It's a new venture for me, and I wanted to try something different," she says. "Everyone has their own role here."
