OPINION

IF IT'S A CIRCUS YOU NEED, HIRE A CIRCUS MASTER

NO NEED TO GO THROUGH THE STRESS OF MOVING ALONE, WRITES STEPHEN ILOTT

STEPHEN ILOTT
Column

So, you sold your house three months ago, the closing is next Friday and your realtor is getting antsy.

The long, cold spring has numbed your toes and your mojo, and you haven't yet faced the many tasks that will get you prepared for the move. Once more, all these tasks and more are dumped on you, the lady of the house and maven of last resort. You find yourself bouncing about like an errant party balloon, the air slowly leaking from your head as you sink to the floor like empty clothes.

You thought ahead a few weeks earlier and found a mover, but your husband, to save some money, told them he would take care of the packing - which is now your job, as he's unexpectedly preoccupied with grumbling and guarding his old motor parts, ancient computer wires and his 300 copies of Mechanical Duck Digest.

You have no further need for martini glasses, but the Rosenthal crystal still winks at you even though you are downsizing and have no place for it and your family wants nothing to do with anything so old-school. You figured out what can go to charities like SafetyNet, Habitat ReStore, or Goodwill, but you haven't dealt with the clogged hall closet, the spare room, that weird crawl space, the 30 bins of Christmas decorations or that crammed space under the kitchen counter where old pans go to die.

What you need is a circus master, an ally who's been through this rodeo before and can destress you with extra energy and can take on that list pronto - even be on hand when rumpled strangers drop by for the free stuff you've posted on Freecycle and Facebook.

It's never too late to engage a circus master to get you to ready. It'll bring a little therapy to your circus.
