Willow Park Ecology Centre's board is seeking four new volunteer directors to start this fall.

The facility in Norval is looking for people who are passionate about a sustainable future and can help grow its ability to provide experiences and education for nature connection within the community and the watershed.

Those with non-profit board and professional experience in finance, governance, public image and resource development are asked to submit their applications for consideration, including a cover letter to explain your goals and interests and a resume.

Applications can be sent to co-chair Cristian Altobelli at cristianaltobelli1@gmail.com.

Since 1998, Willow Park Ecology Centre has become not only a model of ecological restoration on public land, but also a busy centre for educational activities, cultural exploration and community co-operation.

The centre's staff and volunteers run seasonal events and formal educational activities and programs designed to get children outdoors and learning in the natural world. They have mentorship programs for teen volunteers and weekend volunteering for adult involvement.

"With a mission to nurture knowledge and skills for a greener future, our formal programs have become the driver of our ecology management and fulfil our vision to educate and engage people in environmental matters," said program director Tunde Otto.

GEORGETOWN SOCCER TEAM RAISES MONEY FOR CASHH

The GU12 Mustangs recently held a barbecue in support of Cancer Assistance Services of Halton Hills. This amazing team of young ladies raised $1,053 for the community-based organization that supports cancer patients with everything from transportation to and from treatment centres to necessary equipment and supplies.

CASHh would like to thank the GU12 Mustangs for their hard work, the parents, Sherwin Williams, Terra Cotta Cookies, Maple Lodge Farms and everyone who came out to support this event.
