

WELLINGTON-HALTON HILLS CANDIDATES TO TALK ENVIRONMENT AT 100 DEBATES

BRYAN MYERS
bmyers@metroland.com

Wellington-Halton Hills candidates will have an opportunity to talk about the environment at an all-candidates debate in Georgetown.

The Georgetown Chapter of the Canadian Federation of University Women, the Halton Environmental Network, and the Halton Hills Public Library are co-hosting an all-candidates debate for the federal election.

It's part of the 100 debates on the environment series.

The series, made up of 100 inclusive, politically neutral and environmentally-focused debates, will ask candidates across Canada the same four questions regarding the environment in an effort to ensure no party and no candidate can ignore the issue.

CFUW Georgetown will also ask an additional four questions to candidates at the debate.

Community members may also bring questions to submit for the debate.

The all-candidates debate is being held at the John Elliot Theater (9 Church St.) on Oct. 3, from 6 to 9:30 p.m., with the debate starting at 7 p.m.

HUNDREDS JOIN MARCH FOR CLIMATE JUSTICE

MELANIE HENNESSEY

Residents from Halton Hills and beyond rallied on Friday afternoon in the fight against climate change.

The gathering that drew a large crowd to Georgetown's Dominion Gardens Park on Sept. 20 came as part of a global climate strike, with protests happening worldwide in the name of climate justice.

More than 200 children and adults marched along Guelph Street armed with signs, drawing plenty of supportive honks from those passing by in vehicles.

The kids in attendance also participated in an activity with earth-themed parachutes that were hand-painted by local youth as part of the global Parachutes for the Planet initiative.

The local rally was organized by the Halton Hills Climate Action team, which has another rally planned for today (Thursday) at the Acton Arena starting at 4 p.m.
