Heather Morison, Broker, ASA, CIA & CLHMS

Heather Morison, a feminist from Royal LePage, notes that women in business should be appreciated for everything they've accomplished and should look forward to all the milestones that are left for them to achieve. She sees International Women's Day as a way to recognize and celebrate the influences women have had on the world.

In her own life, Heather sees the women in her family as the biggest influences towards her own successful career. "My mother worked hard, often two or three part time jobs at the same time to support the family, yet always made time to befriend and encourage other women in less fortunate circumstances," Heather explains. "My daughter partnered with me in Real Estate for 10 years and we grew together both personally and professionally." She also sees raising a caring and competent daughter to be her greatest achievement and is proud every day to see how well she is raising her own two daughters. For six years in her 40 year career in sales, Heather managed three different Real Estate Offices, and always enjoys seeing the successes of so many of her colleagues whom she mentored.

Advising aspiring businesswomen, Heather says to read a variety of books - from self help to historical novels - to develop confidence and to apply what you learn to achieve your dreams - and most importantly, to be kind and treat everyone with respect.
