TAKING FRIES TO THE NEXT LEVEL

It's a staple on the local food truck scene; a hot pink locale that keeps customers coming back for its unique twist on fried favourites.

The pandemic hasn't slowed business down for Louanne's Famous Fries, reports owner Melissa Keith, who operates the takeout location at Trafalgar Road and 10 Sideroad.

Louanne's Famous Fries most popular dish, Newfie fries.

this year due to COVID-19, local residents flocked back in June for everything from hamburgers and deep-fried pogos to those famous varieties of fries - classic, poutine or Newfie fries, which are covered in ground beef, onions, gravy and a touch of barbecue sauce, or stuffing made with Newfie savoury.

"The Newfie fries are one of our main sellers," said Keith. "But I want to say everything on our menu is popular. There's not one thing that doesn't sell."

The local woman bought the business from her mother-in-law, Louanne, about five years ago and has aspirations to one day also open a restaurant location in Georgetown.

"I was just out of high school and I thought, you know what, I'm going to buy it (the food truck) from her," said Keith. "It's been an amazing experience. So many loyal customers come back saying they love the food."

The truck started off as John's Fries a couple decades ago, with the Newfie fries recipe being developed back then after requests from the owner's Newfoundland friends.

Louanne's exclusively uses Smalley's potatoes, which Keith cuts fresh every day to make her signature fries.
