'NOT ... WHAT THIS COMMUNITY STANDS FOR'

MAYOR DIRECTS DONATION TO FIGHT HATE CRIME

BRYAN MYERS

The mayor of Halton Hills wants to see an end to hate crimes in the region - so much so that he's put his money where his mouth is.

In light of a recent incident of racism - a swastika painted on George Kennedy Public School - Mayor Rick Bonnette has donated $2,000 to Crime Stoppers of Halton Inc. to be used to assist in the investigation of hate crimes.

"To put it bluntly, I am quite distressed that there have now been multiple reported incidents of racism in Halton Hills," Bonnette said. "This is not representative of what this community stands for and I urge people to contact Crime Stoppers if they know anything."

Halton Regional Police Services Chief Stephen Tanner said the service always investigates hate crimes to the fullest extent possible.

"There is no place for hate anywhere in the Region of Halton or in our society," Tanner said. "I am thankful to Mayor Bonnette and the members of town council for speaking out against these offensive incidents."

Colin Jessome, executive director of the Halton chapter of Crime Stoppers, said the financial support was important to offer incentives for people to come forward.

"Having the mayor advocate for the community to utilize Crime Stoppers to address hate crimes is a significant step in getting the message out that these are unwelcome and criminal actions."

Crime Stoppers is an independent charitable organization that works with the public, police and media to deter and solve crime with guaranteed anonymity. Tips may be submitted anonymously either online or by telephone at 1-800-222-TIPS (8477).
