TOWN UNVEILS BLACK HISTORY MONTH PROGRAMS

The Town of Halton Hills will offer a variety of programs to celebrate Black History Month; it will highlight Black authors, artists and educational opportunities throughout the month of February.

"It is more important now, than ever before, that we take the time to acknowledge the legacy of Black Canadians and contributions of Black writers as we seek to foster a united, inclusive and equitable society," said Halton Hills Mayor Rick Bonnette.

Among the highlights of the town's Black History Month's online programs are:

- A virtual lecture series, Tracing Black Lives in Guelph 1890-1945, by Dr. Jade Ferguson, an associate professor at the University of Guelph
- Video interviews by Francesca Durham from Culture Days 2020 with artist Mosa McNeilly and hop-hop artist Promise, an Acton native
- Family story times featuring Black authors and illustrators
- A selection of artwork from the Helson Gallery's past group exhibition by the Halton Black History Awareness Society for Emancipation Day 2019

Graham Paine/Metroland

A number of programs are set to celebrate Black History Month.

- #ReadingBlackout will have library staff sharing books and information by Black writers on teen and adult social media channels
