An opportunity to guide public art policies and proposals in Halton Hills has been announced.

The Town of Halton Hills is looking for three community members to serve on the Public Art Advisory Board as volunteer representatives.

Board members advance public art in Halton Hills by providing input into public art policies and project proposals, determining appropriate locations, and providing advice on the integration of public art into capital projects.

An inaugural public art project, After Nature by Ingrid Mayrhofer, was unveiled in 2020 and new projects are underway for 2021.

"This opportunity to help guide the Town's robust public art program is an exciting one for our local artists," Mayor Rick Bonnette said.

Board members serve a term of three years beginning in March 2021.

Applicants must be at least 18 years old, residents of Halton Hills, and not currently employed by the Town of Halton Hills.

Applicants should be practising artists with demonstrated training, skill and experience who have strong connections to the local arts and culture sector. Applicants should also have a history of giving public presentations and experience working on a community-based team. Experience with public art projects and jurying are considered assets.

The deadline to apply is 8:30 a.m. on Feb. 15, 2021. For more details and to apply, visit: www.haltonhills.ca/en/explore-and-play/public-art.aspx.
