The pandemic can't stop the community's generous spirit.

Those who visited the Lamberts' Lights Christmas display this season donated thousands of dollars, pushing the total raised for the Georgetown Hospital Foundation over the years to more than $100,000, with an additional $20,000 going to various other charities.

The 24th annual festive showcase on Johnson Crescent that ran throughout December and into early January amassed $10,000 for the foundation, and a further $3,318 for Cancer

The Lamberts use a computer program called Light-O-Rama to synchronize the lights to music, then visitors tune in to 104.9 FM to listen and watch.

The popular display draws thousands of visitors each season.
