A Georgetown Italian restaurant will soon say Ciao — for now. On the day that eateries across the province were granted permission to reopen for indoor dining, The Bridgewood in downtown Georgetown revealed that it will be closing its doors this July.

"We are so sad to announce that we will be changing locations," says a statement on the restaurant's Facebook page. "Our date for reopening is not officially determined at this time — still looking for our perfect spot!"

The Bridgewood in downtown Georgetown will close its doors in July.

The owners have indicated that they're trying to find another space to reopen in Georgetown or somewhere nearby, like Acton or Erin.

"We want to thank everyone for the immense support we've received over these past few years," continues the Facebook statement. "Running this restaurant has not only been fulfilling, but an absolute gift as well, thanks to our amazing customers."

Fans of the restaurant expressed their support for The Bridgewood remaining in Georgetown.

"Hopefully you'll find a bigger, better location in town," wrote Kimberly Malcovich. The restaurant has opted to keep its dining room closed for now and continues to offer takeout service from Thursday to Saturday.
