Two local families forever changed by the loss of their children are once again looking to help youth who've shown inner strength in the face of grief.

Applications are now being accepted for the Zach Sutherland and Kaya Firth Resiliency Foundation scholarships, which offers $1,500 for post-secondary education at the university, college or apprenticeship level.

The initiative's namesakes, both 21-year-old University of Guelph students, lost their lives in February 2016 during a kayaking trip on the Credit River.

The scholarship is open to youth who've demonstrated resiliency despite facing grief from the loss of a loved one. Submissions will be welcomed in both written and video format this year.

"We believe that young people who have found and cultivated their own resilience are ideally positioned to light the way for others by sharing their story," explains the charitable foundation's website. "We hope to provide a platform for these young people and intend to start by recognizing and rewarding their resilience."

The foundation reports that it's able to extend the scholarship eligibility to a national level this year due to the generosity of individual and corporate donors.

Applications are being accepted until May 7 and recipients will be announced June 14. Due to the pandemic, plans for an awards ceremony are undetermined at this time.
