WHAT'S ON

DOWNTOWN CORE FEATURED IN BAND'S LATEST VIDEO

The backdrop of a local band's new music video may look awfully familiar to area residents.

Kyle and Ben Hannah — better known as Mountain Head — did the shoot for their latest single, "Let It Out," in downtown Georgetown.

Due to pandemic restrictions, the duo says they really had to flex their DIY muscle to finish the video, which features puppet versions of themselves that they made at home.

"Usually, we are on set with a crew, and there's a whole lot going on, but for this video, we had to scale it back and get creative," said Ben.

Equipped with an idea and a modern cellphone, the brothers set off to historic downtown Georgetown, using it as the main backdrop for their video.

"There are a lot of classic

Georgetown cameos," noted Kyle.

The band's latest song is their ninth studio single. The duo's star began rising in mid-2019 when they released a string of debut singles that garnered attention globally, landing them an American management deal, multiple major label offers and a shoutout from legendary hip-hop group Wu Tang Clan.

During the pandemic, the two men have been busy recording in their local home studio, with more releases expected this year.
