CANADA'S LARGEST DAIRY SHEEP FARM OPENS IN ACTON

BRYAN MYERS
bmyers@metroland.com

The country's largest dairy sheep farm is now open in Acton.

With a capacity for 2,000 milk-producing ewes, OVINO aims to make sheep milk, sheep yoghurt, and eventually sheep cheeses more accessible.

"We want to make sheep milk more affordable and accessible," Jay Akras, business development manager of OVINO, said.

While the taste is very similar to cow milk, sheep milk packs nearly twice as much nutritional value with higher protein, vitamins and minerals. Not to be confused with goat milk, the flavour of sheep milk is closer to cow milk although creamier and sweeter.

A more enticing benefit of sheep milk is its ease of digestion.

"I can't drink cow milk - I can't eat cow butter, but when I drink sheep milk I have no issues digesting it," Akras said.

This could be good news for the roughly 70 per cent of the population who are lactose intolerant.

"I worked in the solar industry, so most of my customers were farmers," Akras said. "We liked the farm life - so we got our own farm."

While he tried his hand with a variety of animals, including ducks and chickens, sheep appealed to him the most.

Originally, Akras tended a flock of sheep on a farm near Campbellville, but as the flock grew, he moved onto the new, larger property in Acton.

"We love our sheep and consider them family," Akras said.

Construction on the modern barn began in 2018 and is almost complete as of June 2021.

Akras chose a steel structure over a traditional wooden barn design to accommodate growth and more modern technology.
