NEWS

LEARN THE SIGNIFICANCE OF SEPT. 30

MEGAN DELAIRE
 mdelaire@toronto.com

For the first time on Sept. 30, this country will observe the National Day for Truth and Reconciliation. If the combination of the date and subject matter sound familiar, it's because Sept. 30 was recognized as Orange Shirt Day for eight years before the federal government elevated the occasion to statutory holiday status.

Even if you were familiar with the reasons why some people wore orange on Sept. 30, there's a lot you can still learn about the legacy of cultural genocide committed in residential schools across Canada. To learn more, consider these resources.

WRITINGS OF PHYLLIS WEBSTAD

The Orange Shirt Day website details the holiday's origin as an event initially organized by Eske-temc (Alkali Lake) Chief Fred Robbins and kept alive by Phyllis (Jack) Webstad. Visit orangeshirtday.org/about-us. After you've learned about the meaning of the colour orange, the historical significance of Sept. 30 and the spirit behind the movement, check out Webstad's four published books on the subject.

ONLINE COURSES

Universities offer free online courses intended to deepen our understanding of the history and issues impacting Indigenous peoples in this country. Courses such as Aboriginal Worldviews and Education and Indigenous Canada are available through Coursera.org.

GRANDMOTHER'S VOICE

This organization of Indigenous women offers free educational resources and workshops through its website, grandmothersvoice.com.

T&R CHANNEL

The Truth and Reconciliation Channel on Vimeo features 213 public access videos about the legacy of residential schools and the importance of truth and reconciliation. Visit vimeo.com/user6187854 and click the "videos" tab.

INDIGENOUS JOURNALISM

The journey to learn more about issues affecting Indigenous peoples in Canada doesn't need to end with Sept. 30. To keep it going all year, consider reading some of the work of more than 70 Indigenous journalists listed at next150.indianhorse.ca/challenges/diversify-your-news.

The residential schools crisis line is available 24-hours a day for anyone experiencing pain or distress as a result of a residential school experience. Support is available at 1-866-925-4419.
