CATHOLIC TRUSTEES MEETING HINDERED BY OUTBURSTS

KATHY YANCHUS

Repeated thuds of the gavel, multiple 'out of order' calls and unsuccessful appeals of chair decisions, the removal of a trustee for flagrantly flouting board etiquette, and an agenda left unfinished, marred the regular meeting of the Halton Catholic District School Board Oct. 5.

Trustees eventually approved the name of the board's new virtual school, but not before the first of many 'out of order' rulings by chair Patrick Murphy directed at Burlington trustee Vincent Iantomasi, almost all of which were appealed by Burlington trustee Tim O'Brien, and all failed.

Upset with the name St. Clare of Assisi Catholic Elementary School, approved by stakeholders and the Bishop of Hamilton, Iantomasi put forth a motion to change the name to Blessed Carlo Acutis CES.

Carlo Acutis has been named the (Future Patron Saint of the Internet) "Internet Saint", said Iantomasi.

"Who are we to change what the Vatican has already established as the Saint of the Internet?" he queried. "We need to make this (the name) current. The Internet is something current."

School naming policy was followed and "if the bishop thought the choice of St. Clare might be an issue in Rome, I'm sure he would not have written a letter of approval," said Halton Hills trustee Janet O'Hearn-Czarnota, a member of the committee.

"We had this discussion already. We approved the name. Why, we would at this juncture, decide to try to make change is beyond me," added Oakville trustee Brenda Agnew.

Iantomasi said he had taken it upon himself to advocate on behalf of a former student trustee whose "will" it was that Carlo Acutis be chosen as the school's name. Iantomasi was given a second and final warning after Murphy called him out of
