A Georgetown restaurant is closed following a basement fire last week.

Firefighters responded to a call around 2 p.m. March 17 at the Main Street South building that houses Uncorked on Main.

"There was about four feet of smoke in the windows and smoke billowing out when they (firefighters) broke in," said building owner Linda Klarner.

Initial reports from the scene indicate that a fire was discovered in the basement of the building and knocked down by firefighters.

building were safely evacuated, along with those shopping at Moxxi Boutique next door, said Klarner.

The fire comes as a harsh blow to the new owners of Uncorked, Sarina and Jagpinder Sibia, who just took over the business on Feb. 1.

Sarina told the Independent and Free Press that the restaurant will remain closed for the foreseeable future until they find out further details about the fire and assess the required repairs.

"My main concern was that the tenants upstairs were evacuated," she said, noting her staff is disappointed as they were all looking forward to celebrating St. Patrick's Day.
