HALTON HOSTS SWEDISH DELEGATION TO DISCUSS DEDICATED FIRST RESPONDERS NETWORK

Canada's award-winning Public Safety Broadband Network Innovation Alliance (PIA) met with a delegation from Sweden in Halton Aug. 29 as its dedicated, fail-safe communication system for first responders continues to attract international attention.

The PIA ensures first responders have continuous access to broadband communications. In day-to-day use, and in times of crisis, fire, police, ambulance and other emergency responders often find themselves without critical information or out of contact because of system outages, overloads, or incompatibility.

"Creating and operating critical communication networks is extremely important to public safety, and access to reliable and resilient data is growing in importance every year. This is a vital issue around the world, and being able to work with other nations and international organizations to share knowledge is a benefit to all," said Anthony Odoardi, PIA executive director and Peel police deputy chief.

The PIA is a not-for-profit public safety organization that oversees Canada's only dedicated first-responder wireless "network of networks," providing coverage for first responders that
