Joseph Racinsky had a good idea where he stood going into Monday's election.

"There's no better poll than going to every door in the ward twice," he said.

Still, elections can be unpredictable, especially when there are eight candidates vying for just two seats at the council table, as was the case in Ward 2. So Racinsky opted against having an election night party, just in case things didn't go as he hoped.

Now, in addition to preparing to become the youngest member of Halton Hills council ever, Ra-
