

High School Sweethearts Reunite at 20th Reunion

DEAR ABBY: I read with interest the letter from the fellow who wondered if he should contact his high school sweetheart before their 20th high school reunion. You advised him to use whatever means he had to track her down. I heartily agree!

When my 20th high school reunion was approaching, I found myself in a similar situation. I wanted very much to see that very special fellow I had dated during my senior year. We had a little spat and I was hurt, so after graduation we drifted apart. I met a man and married in haste, but I kept in touch with my high school sweetheart, exchanging Christmas cards, etc. I even attended his wedding, and subsequently, my husband and I visited him and his wife in their home. Then we lost track of each other.

By last year, I had been divorced for three years — after a rather rocky marriage. I assumed that my high school sweetheart was still married, and I looked forward to seeing him and his wife at our 20th high school reunion. I was therefore dismayed when the reunion committee listed him as among those they could not locate.

Having some idea of where he might be living, I tracked him down and telephoned him. I was shocked when he told me he had been divorced for 10 years — and even more shocked when he told me that he had tried to locate me several times because he still had feelings for me.

To make a long story short, we got together, and we are getting married in three weeks.

Abby, I agree emphatically that your correspondent should follow his heart, and I pray that he will be as fortunate as I was.

DEAR P.C.: Please add my prayers to yours. And may the rest of your lives be the best of your lives.

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago you had a letter in your column from a mother who had been worrying about her teen-age daughter experimenting with peyote — which is mescaline.

I was surprised that you didn't mention the unreliability of street drugs in your answer. When we buy prescription drugs, we can be sure of what they contain and that they are what they are represented to be. But when a person buys illegal drugs from the criminal element, there is no way of knowing what's in them.

When I was in college at Berkeley, I remember reading about a drug dealer who had been arrested not far from our campus. He had been selling a hallucinogenic substance in powder form. The students who bought it thought it was mescaline, but after he was arrested and the stuff was analyzed, it turned out that he had been selling LSD!

My point is that when people buy street drugs they are taking a big risk. Things haven't changed much since I was young and innocent about drugs, so please print this for kids who may now be tempted to buy drugs on the street.

LUCKIER THAN MOST

DEAR LUCKIER: Thanks for sharing your experience. The drug problem is still one of our major problems for people of all ages.
