For the past six months, a 21-member committee of town residents and community agency representatives has been meeting on a regular basis to make plans for establishing a community information centre in Georgetown.

"We're hoping to provide Georgetown with something similar to the Acton Social Services and Information Centre (ASSIC)," said Georgetown resident Barb Johnson, who is chairperson of the Georgetown Multi-Service Centre Task Force.

The purpose of the proposed Centre will be to co-ordinate community services and provide information about the many different services available in Georgetown, Johnson explained.

Glen Williams' resident Kate Murray, who was hired on a 10-month contract just over four weeks ago, is the only paid committee member. Her function is to help the volunteer committee with plans which will lead to an information centre in Georgetown. "The Centre will be multi-service, providing information to residents and looking after the referral and co-ordination of services," Murray said.

"A lot of people like to describe it as one-stop shopping—somewhere where you can get your information all in one place," she added.

Murray, who has seven years' experience in the social service field with community groups in Toronto, said the local task force is examining the scope of the proposed Centre, as well as its financing and its possible location. Funding is expected to come from provincial government ministries, local levels of government (the Region and Town), United Way and fund-raising events organized by volunteers. The Centre will likely be located in a rented facility or in a new building, depending on the availability of funding, Murray said. The site will be in Georgetown to guarantee "accessibility."

The Task Force committee has four subcommittees, each looking at specific aspects of the proposal such as programming, articles of incorporation and funding and finance. Members are looking specifically at Georgetown's services with an eye to "fill in some of the gaps and satisfy local needs," Murray said.

Among plans being considered by the committee are future presentations to Halton Hills Town Council and Halton Regional Council. Both presentations will outline the purpose of the proposed Centre and the committee's progress toward establishing the new service in Georgetown.

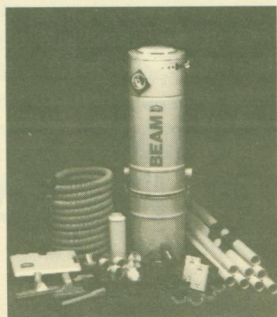

By the end of July, firm plans should be in place, Murray predicted, adding that the new Centre will be a welcome addition to the community. "The time is right in Georgetown," she said.

Commenting on the task force, she added, "What impresses me most is the community involvement on the committee. The commitment of task force members is good."
