

Will you be prepared?

A recent edition of the New York Times listed the five most important skills for today's employment market. They are computer literacy, foreign languages, mathematics, writing, and communications. I doubt that anyone is surprised by any of the skills on the list. They are skills that are international, and they are transferable from one job to the next.

We know that the job market is changing. We are told that 50% of today's jobs will disappear in the next decade. It's difficult to plan ahead when the future is unclear and the old rules don't apply. The best that you can do is to believe that there will be opportunities and to acquire the transferable skills which will position you to respond to those opportunities as they emerge.

The Halton Board, through Adult & Continuing Education, provides programs which will enable you to improve your skills and enhance your opportunities. Let us help you prepare for your future.
