"Free" drop-off questioned by rural resident

"Is it a free drop-off?" he asked council. "It's not a free drop-off," he contended. "It's smoke and mirrors."

After hearing six delegations, council supported a staff report which recommended that the Town endorse the user pay system at Leferink's, at least for the balance of this year. Council also backed another recommendation calling for a staff report by the end of August which will investigate garbage collection and disposal of refuse from the rural area, town-wide garbage collection every two weeks and the implications of regional plans to adopt a single-tier waste management scheme by 1994.

Town councillors were warned that rural residents continue to be unhappy with the current system. Barlow and Georgetown environmentalist Barbara Halsall also noted that area residents travelling to the Milton landfill are likely to do some of their shopping in Milton, thereby taking retail dollars out of Halton Hills.

Stewarttown resident David Barrager and Glen Williams resident Al Pilutti also stated their concerns about the rural garbage dilemma. Barrager asked council find a resolution to the problem which he brought to their attention when he approached council more than a month ago. Pilutti took aim at Ward 2 councillor Bill Robson, criticizing his stand on several issues including Robson's vote in favor of the regional decision to discontinue funding to container stations in Halton.

Bert Leferink took issue with some comments in the staff report that suggested that Halton-generated garbage must be disposed of at the Halton landfill site. Once waste is brought into his transfer station, the location of its disposal is up to him. His Certificate of Approval from the Ministry of the Environment allows him to dispose of garbage at sites in Canada and the United States.

Ag Museum expands

By Wendy Long

The Ontario Agricultural Museum, located in Milton, is receiving $190,000 worth of expansion and improvement in artifact storage thanks to a jobsOntarioCapital project.

In a recent media release, the Minister of Agriculture and Food announced 33 new projects, funded by the jobsOntarioCapital program, at agricultural colleges, research stations and other ministry sites throughout Ontario.

"There will be an addition to the artifact storage facility plus an upgrade of the original structure," said Tony Price, manager of finance and operations at the Ontario Agricultural Museum.

The changes and expansion will be made to the existing storage building on one of the museum's south service roads. Visitors to the museum won't be aware of the changes, as the building is not an exhibit nor is it open to the public.

"It will provide us with better controlled atmosphere for the preservation of our artifacts," Price said. Currently the museum estimates that it houses between 15,000 and 18,000 artifacts, many of which are on display to visitors in period exhibits.

The museum project has been awarded to Detailed Farm Buildings Ltd., of Rockton, south of Cambridge.

"The projects funded through jobsOntarioCapital will provide welcome jobs in communities throughout the province, but they are also an investment in the future of agriculture in Ontario," Ontario Agriculture and Food Minister Elmer Buchanan said.

The media release said the ministry selected projects which will enhance sustainable agricultural research, provide better animal care facilities and improve health and safety measures within its facilities.

"These 33 new projects will provide immediate jobs and support economic vitality within Ontario's agri-food sector," said Buchanan.

The Ministry of Agriculture and Food received $2,193,400 in jobsOntarioCapital funding for its new projects. All projects must be completed by the end of the fiscal year, at the end of March.
