Destreaming dilemma

By Trish Tervit
Special

The Halton Board of Education will create a committee that will keep track of exceptional students during the destreaming process.

The committee will monitor identified students to make sure their educational needs are being met under the new destreaming system.

Identified students include the entire range of children from learning disabled to gifted.

"I believe if a teacher can meet the needs of the exceptional students, they can meet the needs of all students, in my opinion," trustee Linda Glover told the board at a meeting last week.

Destreaming is a program implemented by the Ministry of Education that calls for all Grade 9 students at all levels of learning ability to be put in the same classes at a high school as opposed to the current system of students choosing advanced or general level classes.

Trustees said that they have received several calls from parents concerned that destreaming could result in their children getting a poorer quality of education.

"Parents want some assurance that we're not going to just ignore their kids," trustee Debbie Marklew said.

Trustee Don Cassidy said he was concerned that other students were being left out of the motion adding that he was worried about the impact of destreaming on all students. He asked Glover if she had presented the motion as a result of a presentation by a group of parents called SEAC which represents the interests of exceptional children.

She admitted the presentation influenced her to put the motion forward quicker than she planned.

The committee will be comprised of a superintendent, special education coordinator, special services coordinator, special education head, elementary and secondary principal, trustees and SEAC representatives.

The committee will present a preliminary report to the board in May. It will outline how the needs of identified students will be met in Grade 9 during the 93/94 school year.

Apprentices recognized

Between September 91 and October 92 over 40 individuals have successfully completed apprenticeships in Halton Hills. Currently there are over 200 registered apprentices employed with over 70 Halton Hills employers.

In recognizing that apprenticeship training and skilled trades are important to the local economy and the business community, the Halton Hills Chamber of Commerce is hosting a luncheon on March 3, 1993 at the Halton Hills Cultural Centre to recognize the graduates for 1992 from the over 60 skilled trades training opportunities.

If you are a recent graduate or an employer of a graduate from a recognized apprenticeship program, please contact the Chamber at 877-7119.
