Fire prevention is year-round

Having a working smoke alarm to warn you of a fire is only part of the battle against fire deaths, say the experts at the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA), a nonprofit membership organization headquartered in Quincy, Massachusetts. "People need to understand how quickly fire in their homes can spread, and to stay out once they are safely out of the building," says Meri-K Appy, assistant vice president for Public Affairs and Education.

Because people to often aren't well prepared to evacuate a fast growing fire, NFPA decided to make escape the focus of this year's Fire Prevention Week, October 3-9. The theme is "Get Out, Stay Out: Your Fire Safe Response." You may only have a very few minutes to safely escape a fire, and NFPA teaches people to resist the temptation to re-enter a burning building. "Fire fighters are equipped and trained to go into a fire, we are not," Ms. Appy adds.
